STUDENT EDITORIAL BOARD

As a general matter, student staff members of the journal Law & Contemporary Problems (L&CP) do not select articles for the symposium issues in its volumes. As L&CP is organized and operates, issue proposals are approved by the journal's faculty board and article selections are made by the special editors. The student role is typically to produce the issues once articles have been finalized by the authors and special editors. In the case of this issue, 85-1: Sex in Law, no articles have been read, edited, or reviewed by any L&CP student staff editors or executive board members acting in their official capacities as journal members. Over the summer of 2021, eight 3L students resigned from the journal and the remainder of the 3L membership voted not to have student members contribute to this symposium in their official capacities; these decisions were in response to the inclusion of Kathleen Stock's essay and the faculty board's rejection of the student executive board's request for use of a style guide on uniform language for the issue which the student executive board's membership considered necessary to avoid harm to the transgender community.

LAW AND CONTEMPORARY PROBLEMS publishes four editions per annual volume; occasionally a double issue will span two of the four publication dates. Because each issue is a symposium, delayed submission of an article necessarily postpones publication of the issue. We ask our readers to understand and to forbear the occasional resulting irregularity. Views expressed in articles in this periodical are attributable to the authors and not to the periodical, the editors, or Duke University.
