BULLCOMING v. NEW MEXICO: REVISITING ANALYST TESTIMONY AFTER MELENDEZ-DIAZ

ALEX HERSKOWITZ

I. INTRODUCTION

Bullcoming v. New Mexico presents the Supreme Court with an opportunity to revisit its controversial holding in Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts. In Melendez-Diaz, the Court considered whether a defendant’s right to confront his accuser was violated when the state introduced the reports of a laboratory analyst, but not the analyst who produced them. By a 5-4 majority, the Melendez-Diaz Court held that because the affidavit was an out-of-court statement intended for trial, in other words “testimonial,” the state violated a defendant’s constitutional right to confront his accuser by not putting the analyst on the stand. Bullcoming poses the question left open by Melendez-Diaz: Does the State still violate the Confrontation Clause if it calls to testify an analyst other than the one who actually performed or observed the laboratory test at issue? Thus, Bullcoming is the Court’s most recent case in a jurisprudential line addressing the scope of a defendant’s procedural right to confrontation.

The Sixth Amendment’s Confrontation Clause guarantees a defendant the right “to be confronted with the witnesses against him.” Defendants benefit from this right through the exclusion of inculpatory evidence absent an opportunity to confront an accusatory witness. The recent appointment of Justices Sotomayor and Kagan to

---

3. Id. at 2530.
4. Id. at 2532.
5. Petition for Writ of Certiorari at i, Bullcoming, No. 09-10876 (U.S. May 2, 2010).
6. U.S. CONST. amend. VI.
the Court calls into question not only whether the holding of Melendez-Diaz requires a particular analyst at trial, but also its continuing viability.\(^8\)

II. FACTS

In the late afternoon of August 14, 2005, Donald Bullcoming was arrested for driving while intoxicated (DWI) after a minor traffic accident in which he rear-ended another vehicle.\(^9\) The other driver suspected that Bullcoming was drunk—while exchanging information he had noted Bullcoming’s eyes were bloodshot and he smelled of alcohol.\(^10\) The other driver’s wife called the police to report the accident.\(^11\) By the time the police arrived, Bullcoming had left the scene.\(^12\)

Shortly thereafter, the officer found Bullcoming a short distance from the scene and noted that he appeared to be drunk.\(^13\) The officer then brought Bullcoming back to the scene of the accident, where a second officer also observed signs of drunkenness.\(^14\) In response to police questioning, Bullcoming claimed not to have had a drink since 6 AM that morning.\(^15\) He failed the field sobriety tests, however, and the police arrested him for DWI.\(^16\) After Bullcoming refused a breath test, the police obtained a search warrant to perform a blood alcohol test.\(^17\) The test indicated that Bullcoming had a blood alcohol content of .21 percent, well over the legal limit of .08 percent.\(^18\)

A gas chromatograph machine was used to analyze Bullcoming’s blood alcohol content.\(^19\) New Mexico provides standard laboratory

---

10. Id.
11. Id.
12. Id.
13. Id. at 5.
14. Id.
15. Id.
16. Id.
17. Id.
18. Id. procedures that analysts must follow when processing blood samples.\textsuperscript{20} The machines produce data that the analysts interpret and validate.\textsuperscript{21} The laboratory also preserves the unused portion of the blood sample for six months so it is available for retesting.\textsuperscript{22} Per standard procedure, the analyst who processed Bullcoming’s blood sample recorded on the forensic report that he had received the specimen with the seal intact, that he had followed the correct procedures, and that the statements he recorded were correct.\textsuperscript{23}

At Bullcoming’s trial for aggravated drunk driving, the State did not call the testing analyst to the stand.\textsuperscript{24} Although the State did not claim that particular analyst was unavailable, the State called a different analyst from the laboratory—one who did not have any connection to Bullcoming’s sample.\textsuperscript{25} Bullcoming objected to this analyst’s testimony as a violation of his confrontation rights.\textsuperscript{26} He also objected to the introduction of the laboratory report as a business record.\textsuperscript{27} Ordinarily, hearsay statements made during the regular course of business are admissible at trial and are not subject to the requirements of the Confrontation Clause.\textsuperscript{28} Where, however, the business conducted specifically is done in anticipation of trial, admission without opportunity for cross-examination violates the Confrontation Clause.\textsuperscript{29} The trial court nonetheless admitted both the laboratory report and the analyst’s testimony.\textsuperscript{30} Bullcoming subsequently was convicted and sentenced to serve two years in prison.\textsuperscript{31} On appeal, the New Mexico Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that the reports were “prepared routinely with guarantees of trustworthiness” and were nontestimonial.\textsuperscript{32}

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{20} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{21} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{22} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{23} Id. at 5.
\item \textsuperscript{24} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{26} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{27} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{29} \textit{See Palmer v. Hoffman}, 318 U.S. 109, 115 (1943) (holding that a report made by a railroad in anticipation of litigation was not a “business record” for purposes of the hearsay rule).
\item \textsuperscript{30} Bullcoming, 189 P.3d at 684.
\item \textsuperscript{31} Brief for Petitioner, \textit{supra} note 19, at 6–7.
\item \textsuperscript{32} Bullcoming, 189 P.3d at 685.
\end{itemize}
III. LEGAL BACKGROUND

The Confrontation Clause guarantees that “[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him . . . .”33 Much of the debate surrounding this guarantee concerns who is a “witness against” the defendant.34 In 1980, the Court decided Ohio v. Roberts,35 which replaced the Court’s then-existing case-by-case approach with a new Confrontation Clause doctrine.36 In Roberts, the Court held that hearsay statements are admissible if the defendant was unavailable and the statements “b[ore] adequate indicia of reliability.”37 Such “indicia of reliability” could be inferred if a statement fell within a “firmly rooted hearsay exception” or showed “particularized guarantees of trustworthiness.”38

In 2004, Crawford v. Washington39 overruled Roberts and its progeny. In an opinion authored by Justice Scalia, seven members of the Court established a new framework for interpreting alleged violations of the Confrontation Clause.40 Under Crawford, a “witness against” a defendant is one who “bear[s] testimony.”41 The Court defined testimony as being “typically a solemn declaration or affirmation made for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.”42 While declining to identify all classes of testimonial statements, the Crawford Court noted several important examples that indisputably would fall into this category, including43:

- ex parte in-court testimony or its functional equivalent—that is, material such as affidavits, custodial examinations, prior testimony that the defendant was unable to cross-examine, or similar pretrial statements that declarants would reasonably expect to be used prosecutorially . . . extrajudicial statements . . . contained in formalized testimonial materials, such as affidavits, depositions, prior testimony, or confessions . . . statements that were made

---

33. U.S. CONST. amend. VI.
34. See Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 43 (2004) (finding it necessary to examine the historical background to resolve which of the various plausible theories about who is a “witness against” a defendant under the Confrontation Clause is correct).
36. GEORGE FISHER, EVIDENCE 567 (2d ed. 2008).
37. Id. at 66.
38. Id.
40. Id. at 43.
41. Id. at 51.
42. Id.
43. Id. at 51–52.
After making Confrontation Clause violations contingent on a testimonial hearsay statement, the Crawford Court permitted “only those exceptions established at the time of the founding.” Thus, the Confrontation Clause had morphed from a substantive reliability rule into a procedural guarantee.

Following Crawford, the Court granted certiorari in Davis v. Washington to further define “testimonial” statements. Davis consolidated two cases involving statements made to police during, or immediately after, an emergency. In an 8-1 decision, with only Justice Thomas dissenting in part, the Davis Court formulated a new “primary-purpose” test for determining whether a statement is testimonial in situations involving police interrogations. Under Davis, “[s]tatements are nontestimonial when made in the course of police interrogation under circumstances objectively indicating that the primary purpose of the interrogation is to enable police assistance to meet an ongoing emergency.”

Recently decided Michigan v. Bryant addressed a question left open by Davis: Is an emergency ongoing if the perpetrator of a violent crime may still be in the area? In Michigan, the police questioned a mortally wounded victim half an hour after he had been shot. The Court held that the victim’s statements had been made during the course of an ongoing emergency and therefore were nontestimonial.

44. Id.
45. Id. at 68 (exempting nontestimonial statements from the Confrontation Clause regardless of their reliability).
46. Id. at 54 (accepting admissibility of hearsay statements conditioned on “unavailability and a prior opportunity to cross-examine”).
47. Id. at 67 (“To be sure, the [Confrontation] Clause’s ultimate goal is to ensure reliability of evidence, but it is a procedural rather than a substantive guarantee. It commands, not that evidence be reliable, but that reliability be assessed in a particular manner: by testing in the crucible of cross-examination.”).
49. Id. at 817.
50. Id.
51. Id. at 822.
52. Id.
54. Id. at 1150.
55. Id.
under Crawford.

In reaching this decision, the Court emphasized that the “primary purpose” inquiry is an objective one and does not seek to determine the “subjective or actual purpose” of the parties involved.

Melendez-Diaz addressed a separate question concerning the admissibility of laboratory certificates of analysis when the testing analyst does not appear at trial. In a 5-4 decision, the Court held that the “analysts’ affidavits were testimonial statements, and the analysts were ‘witnesses’ for the purposes of the Sixth Amendment.” The analysts’ reports therefore clearly were subject to the Confrontation Clause under the reasoning of Crawford and Davis. The Court stated that the reports fell into the “core class of testimonial statements” described in Crawford because they “are quite plainly affidavits.” The affidavits were “incontrovertibly a ‘solemn declaration or affirmation made for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.’” They served the same purpose as having a live witness testify. In fact, because the affidavits’ only purpose was for use at trial, under Massachusetts law the affidavits unquestionably were testimonial. Although denying that pragmatic effects have constitutional relevance, the Court nonetheless vehemently contested the dissenters’ assertions that applying the Crawford doctrine to laboratory analysts would wreak havoc on an overburdened state prosecution system.

The dissent distinguished the analysts in Melendez-Diaz who had “witnessed nothing to give them personal knowledge of the defendant’s guilt” from the “conventional witness[es]” at issue in Crawford and Davis who were witnesses to a crime. The dissenters feared the majority opinion’s “vast potential to disrupt criminal

---

56. Id. at 1164.
57. Id. at 1156.
59. Id. at 2532.
60. Id. (stating that “this case involves little more than the application of our holding in Crawford v. Washington”).
61. Id.
62. Id. (quoting Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 51 (2004)).
63. Id. (quoting Davis v. Washington, 547 U.S. 813, 830 (2006)).
64. Id.
65. Id. at 2536 (acknowledging that, while other methods may exist for challenging forensic reports, the Constitution guarantees only confrontation).
66. Id. (Kennedy, J., dissenting). procedures” and argued that Confrontation Clause doctrine was becoming “a body of formalistic and wooden rules.”

In Bullcoming, the Court will reconcile conflicting state supreme court and federal circuit court precedents concerning the admissibility of a non-testifying witness’s statement through the in-court testimony of a substitute expert witness. In addition to New Mexico, two state supreme courts have held that a forensic analyst’s statement, introduced into court by another forensic analyst, does not violate the Confrontation Clause. Two other state supreme courts and two federal circuit courts have ruled in the opposite direction, holding that a surrogate analyst’s testimony does violate a defendant’s confrontation rights. Though the Court’s decision in Bullcoming may represent a slight refinement of a doctrinal issue regarding the sufficiency of substitute procedural safeguards, the practical implications for law enforcement and defendants could be significant.

IV. HOLDING

In State v. Bullcoming, the New Mexico Supreme Court held that the introduction of the blood alcohol report did not violate Bullcoming’s Confrontation Clause rights even though the analyst

67. Id. at 2544.
68. Petition for Writ of Certiorari, supra note 5, at 17.
69. See Rector v. State, 285 Ga. 714, 715–16 (2009) (holding that substitute forensic analyst’s testimony was valid under the Confrontation Clause where that witness was not a “mere conduit” for the laboratory report, and that in any event, such error would have been harmless); Pendergrass v. Indiana, 913 N.E.2d 703, 708 (Ind. 2009), petition for cert. filed (U.S. Feb. 22, 2010) (No. 09-866) (holding that a lab supervisor knowledgeable of laboratory procedures may testify in place of a nontestifying forensic analyst employee).
70. Id.
71. Commonwealth v. Avila, 912 N.E.2d 1014, 1029 (Mass. 2009) (holding that substitute medical examiner is “not permitted on direct examination to recite or otherwise testify about the underlying factual findings of the unavailable medical examiner as contained in the autopsy report”); State v. Locklear, 363 N.C. 438, 451–53 (2009) (holding that the trial court erred in admitting testimony of a nontestifying analyst, but that such error was “harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.”).
72. United States v. Moon, 512 F.3d 359, 361–62 (7th Cir.) cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 40 (2008) (holding that a testing chemist’s conclusions were testimonial and therefore subject to the Confrontation Clause); United States v. Martinez-Rios, 595 F.3d 581, 586 (5th Cir. 2010) (holding that it violated the Confrontation Clause to admit a certificate of nonexistence of record through an agent who reviewed the defendant’s file but did not conduct the records search).
73. Id.
who performed the test did not testify at trial.\textsuperscript{75} The court held that the defendant’s Confrontation Clause rights were not violated because another laboratory employee was available for cross-examination.\textsuperscript{76}

To assess whether a violation of the Confrontation Clause took place, the New Mexico Supreme Court first examined the question of whether the report at issue was testimonial.\textsuperscript{77} Under the State’s theory, \textit{Melendez-Diaz} was limited to Justice Thomas’s concurring opinion because it reflected the narrowest grounds of agreement for a majority of the Court.\textsuperscript{78} Justice Thomas concurred in \textit{Melendez-Diaz} only because the ‘reports in question were ‘plainly affidavits,’ and thus were clearly ‘formalized testimonial materials’ governed by the Confrontation Clause.’\textsuperscript{79} The State claimed that because the certificate at issue in \textit{Bullcoming} was not a sworn affidavit—the sticking point for Justice Thomas—there was no Confrontation Clause violation.\textsuperscript{80} The court also noted that under \textit{Crawford}, ‘the absence of oath was not dispositive.’\textsuperscript{81} The New Mexico court held these arguments unpersuasive, citing the fact that an affidavit is only one example of “formalized testimonial materials” and its absence therefore is not dispositive.\textsuperscript{82} The report here, like the certificates in \textit{Melendez-Diaz}, was ‘“formalized testimonial material[]’ in that [it was] made ‘for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.’”\textsuperscript{83}

Thus, the court held that the laboratory report was testimonial, but the court did not stop there. The court then considered whether the defendant’s Confrontation Clause rights had nonetheless been preserved through the testimony and opportunity to cross-examine a laboratory analyst not directly involved in testing the defendant’s sample.\textsuperscript{84} Calling the analyst who performed the test a “mere

\begin{itemize}
\item 75. \textit{Id.} at 14.
\item 76. \textit{Id.} at 9.
\item 77. \textit{Id.} at 6–9.
\item 78. \textit{Id.} at 8. In \textit{Marks v. United States}, the Court issued guidance on interpreting plurality opinions by stating that “[w]hen a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds.” \textit{Marks v. United States}, 430 U.S. 188, 193 (1977).
\item 79. \textit{Bullcoming}, 226 P.3d at 8.
\item 80. \textit{Id.} (quoting \textit{Crawford v. Washington}, 541 U.S. 36, 52 (2004)).
\item 81. \textit{Id.}
\item 82. \textit{Id.}
\item 83. \textit{Id.} (quoting \textit{Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts}, 129 S. Ct. 2527, 2532 (2009)).
\item 84. \textit{Id.} at 8–9.
\end{itemize}
scrivener” and labeling the gas chromatograph machine as the defendant’s “true accuser[,]” the court held that the “live, in-court testimony of a separate qualified analyst [was] sufficient to fulfill [the] defendant’s right to confrontation.” Under the court’s reasoning, because the analysis of the sample required neither interpretation nor independent judgment, the test results essentially were the equivalent of raw data. The court therefore deemed the testimony of the non-testing analyst a sufficient safeguard of the Confrontation Clause’s protections.

V. ARGUMENTS

A. Bullcoming’s (Petitioner’s) Arguments

Petitioner Bullcoming argues that the Confrontation Clause encompasses a defendant’s right to confront the “particular witness” that is the source of an inculpatory testimonial statement. Bullcoming finds support for this constitutional requirement—which he calls the “particular-witness rule”—in the text, purpose, and jurisprudential history of the Confrontation Clause. Thus, the State may not carve out an exception to this rule by substituting, for example, one laboratory analyst for another, at trial.

1. The Particular-Witness Rule

Bullcoming argues that the Framers’ use of the definite article—”the”—in the Sixth Amendment’s right “to be confronted with the witnesses,” read in conjunction with Crawford’s similar use of the definite article in expounding the exclusionary rule, is a clear indication that the witness in question is “the particular creator of that evidence.” Similarly, in Melendez-Diaz—“[t]he analysts who swore the affidavits provided testimony against Melendez-Diaz, and they are therefore subject to confrontation”—indicates that the

85. Id. at 9.
86. Id.
87. Id.
88. Brief for Petitioner, supra note 19, at 13.
89. Id. at 10–22.
90. Id at 14.
91. Id. at 13 (emphasis added).
Court was referring to the same analyst providing the forensic report.\(^{92}\)

The particular-witness rule is necessary to serve the four purposes of confrontation previously identified by the Court: cross-examination, testifying under oath, observation by a jury, and “‘physical presence’” of the witness.\(^{93}\) These aspects are thwarted when the State refuses to provide the particular witness whose testimony is at issue, but instead relies on a surrogate witness.\(^{94}\) Invoking Wigmore’s adage that cross-examination is the “‘greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth,’” Bullcoming contends that its functions are undermined by surrogate testimony because personal knowledge, confrontation under oath, and the jury’s ability to observe the accuser’s demeanor are all missing.\(^{95}\)

2. No Exceptions to the Particular-Witness Rule

Bullcoming contends that the New Mexico Supreme Court erred in creating an exception to the particular-witness rule.\(^{96}\) The New Mexico court’s exception was based on its characterization of the defendant’s opportunity to cross-examine the surrogate analyst as meaningful.\(^{97}\) Where testimonial statements made by an out-of-court declarant are at issue, however, the Confrontation Clause allows no exceptions to this rule.\(^{98}\) The Confrontation Clause does not permit surrogate witnesses because even if a surrogate witness might satisfy a defendant’s cross-examination rights, this still would not address the other three aspects of confrontation—oath, observation, and “physical presence.”\(^{99}\) Underscoring the importance of these aspects of confrontation is Crawford’s directive that “[t]he text of the Sixth Amendment does not suggest any open-ended exceptions from the confrontation requirement to be developed by the courts.”\(^{100}\) A litany of “good sense” reasons to preclude a forensic-evidence exception to \(^{92}\) Id. at 27 (quoting Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, 129 S. Ct. 2527, 2537 n.6 (2009)).

\(^{93}\) Id. at 15.
\(^{94}\) Id.
\(^{95}\) Id. at 16.
\(^{96}\) Id. at 22.
\(^{97}\) Id. at 23.
\(^{98}\) Id. at 25 (“If a ’particular guarantee’ of the Sixth Amendment is violated, no substitute procedure can cure the violation . . . .”).
\(^{99}\) Id. at 23–24.
\(^{100}\) Brief for Petitioner, supra note 19, at 24 (alteration in original) (quoting Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 54 (2004)) (quotation marks omitted).
the particular-witness rule also indicates why surrogate witnesses do not satisfy the Confrontation Clause.\textsuperscript{101} Particularly compelling reasons include the risk of error, falsification, poor judgment, and improper training of forensic analysts.\textsuperscript{102}

For these reasons, Bullcoming disputes that the Constitution allows any exceptions to the particular-witness rule. If the Court disagrees, however, an exception would not be warranted under the facts of this case.\textsuperscript{103} The analyst who performed Bullcoming’s test was later placed on administrative leave without pay.\textsuperscript{104} Had that analyst testified the State would have been forced to disclose the reasons for this disciplinary action—reasons that may have cast doubt on his credibility as a witness.\textsuperscript{105} As Justice Scalia noted during oral arguments, “boy, it smells bad to me.”\textsuperscript{106}

Bullcoming also rejects the New Mexico Supreme Court’s rationale that the analyst who conducted the test was a “mere scrivener,” making the testimony of the surrogate witness a sufficient protection of his confrontation rights.\textsuperscript{107} The Confrontation Clause is a procedural guarantee; it applies even if the analyst was nothing more than a transcriptionist.\textsuperscript{108} In this case, however, that the declarations in the analyst’s forensic report went far beyond mere transcriptions.\textsuperscript{109}

\textbf{B. New Mexico’s (Respondent’s) Argument}

Respondent New Mexico vigorously disputes the New Mexico Supreme Court’s concession that the analyst’s report in \textit{Bullcoming} is testimonial.\textsuperscript{110} Justice Thomas’s opinion in \textit{Melendez-Diaz} constrained the type of statements that could be considered testimonial to extrajudicial statements . . . contained in formalized testimonial materials, such as affidavits, depositions, prior testimony, or confessions.\textsuperscript{111} As a contemporaneous, unsworn, non-adversarial

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{101} Id. at 28–31.
  \item \textsuperscript{102} Id.
  \item \textsuperscript{103} Id. at 26.
  \item \textsuperscript{104} Id. at 31.
  \item \textsuperscript{105} Id.
  \item \textsuperscript{106} Transcript of Oral Argument at 38, Bullcoming v. New Mexico, No. 09-10876 (U.S. Mar. 2, 2010).
  \item \textsuperscript{107} Id. at 35–36.
  \item \textsuperscript{108} Id. at 36.
  \item \textsuperscript{109} Id. at 36–37.
  \item \textsuperscript{110} Brief for Respondent at 7, Bullcoming v. New Mexico, No. 09-10876 (U.S. Jan. 10, 2011).
  \item \textsuperscript{111} Id. at 12.
\end{itemize}
public record it is not “formalized testimonial materials” that would violate the Confrontation Clause.\textsuperscript{112}

New Mexico also distinguishes the \textit{Melendez-Diaz} affidavit from the report in \textit{Bullcoming} because of the “inquisitorial” nature of the former.\textsuperscript{113} The Confrontation Clause was a response to the “common-law abuse of admitting at trial statements made to magistrates during pre-trial \textit{ex parte} examinations.”\textsuperscript{114} By focusing on the development of the Clause as a response to these abusive investigatory procedures,” the confrontation right is implicated only when the inquisitorial investigation substitutes for the adversarial examination of witnesses at trial.”\textsuperscript{115}

The affidavit in \textit{Melendez-Diaz} was “inquisitorial” because its purpose was to incriminate the defendant, it was prepared at the request of a police officer, and the analyst did not swear to the affidavit until a week after the laboratory test was performed.\textsuperscript{116} In contrast, New Mexico characterizes the statement at issue in \textit{Bullcoming} as a non-inquisitorial public record because it “contain[ed] routine scientific observations by public officials who are independent of law enforcement, even if they are made at the arm’s length request of a police officer.”\textsuperscript{117}

New Mexico invites the Court to overrule the \textit{Davis} primary-purpose test as “unworkable, flawed, and overly broad in relation to the purposes of the Confrontation Clause.”\textsuperscript{118} Limiting the protections of the Confrontation Clause to “inquisitorial abuses” aligns most closely with the Framers’ original intent to protect against prosecutorial abuse.\textsuperscript{119} Under this view, noncustodial police investigations—whether or not they are conducted during the course of an emergency—are non-adversarial and therefore would not be subject to the exclusionary rule.\textsuperscript{120} Likewise, “scientific analysis is not an interrogation and does not present a danger of prosecutorial abuse.”\textsuperscript{121}

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{112} Id. at 13–14.
  \item \textsuperscript{113} Id. at 27–28.
  \item \textsuperscript{114} Id. at 24.
  \item \textsuperscript{115} Id. at 25.
  \item \textsuperscript{116} Id. at 23.
  \item \textsuperscript{117} Id.
  \item \textsuperscript{118} Id. at 41.
  \item \textsuperscript{119} Id. at 37, 41–42.
  \item \textsuperscript{120} Id. at 39.
  \item \textsuperscript{121} Id. at 35.
\end{itemize}
New Mexico proposes that the Court should adopt a rule first announced in United States v. Inadi.

Under this rule, testimonial statements would be narrowly defined as those statements made to prosecutorial or judicial authorities that lack any “independent evidentiary significance.”

A testimonial statement would have no “independent evidentiary significance” if that statement could be “replicated by in-court testimony.” This proposed rule best responds to the Framers’ concerns.

Even if the Court determines that the laboratory report at issue in Bullcoming is testimonial, New Mexico argues that Bullcoming’s Sixth Amendment rights were protected by the opportunity to retest the sample. Retesting the sample would serve the same purposes as cross-examination by testing the laboratory analyst’s recollection, veracity, skill, ambiguity of result and any possible transcription error. Thus, if there was an error, it was harmless.

VI. LIKELY DISPOSITION

Bullcoming presents an opportunity for the Court to modify its approach to Confrontation Clause jurisprudence with regard to forensic evidence. Since Melendez-Diaz was decided (by a 5-4 vote), two members of the majority—Justices Souter and Stevens—have left the Court. Thus, if either Justices Sotomayor or Kagan aligns with the Melendez-Diaz minority that precedent could be overturned or significantly narrowed. During her confirmation hearing, then-Solicitor General Elena Kagan openly discussed her concerns about the practical effects of the Court’s opinions, specifically citing the impact of Melendez-Diaz on the criminal justice system. Justice Sotomayor, as a former prosecutor and trial judge, may also be sympathetic to the concerns of state prosecutors and law enforcement. Additionally, Justice Sotomayor’s record as an

---

123. Brief for Respondent, supra note 110, at 51 (quoting Inadi, 475 U.S. at 394).
124. Id. at 49.
125. Id. at 47.
126. Id. at 52.
127. Id. at 52–56.
128. Id. at 59.
129. Vinegrad, supra note 8.
appeal judge indicates that she could be more attuned to pragmatic rather than doctrinal concerns.\textsuperscript{132}

The remaining members of the Melendez-Diaz majority—Justices Scalia, Ginsburg, and Thomas—likely will stay intact as Bullcoming appears to be a logical extension of their holding. Justices Scalia and Ginsburg almost certainly will find Bullcoming, like Melendez-Diaz, to be “a rather straightforward application of Crawford.”\textsuperscript{133} Justice Thomas likely will conclude that Bullcoming retains the requisite level of formality for a testimonial statement.\textsuperscript{134}

If a majority of the Justices choose to affirm the New Mexico Supreme Court, it is unclear how they would distinguish Melendez-Diaz. First, New Mexico’s position that Justice Thomas’s concurrence constrains the holding in Melendez-Diaz is undermined by the majority’s opinion in that case. That opinion “flatly reject[s]” the notion that analysts are not “accusatory” witnesses.\textsuperscript{135} Moreover, the “wholesale dismissal of the fundamental underpinnings of the dictum portion of the majority’s opinion necessarily would require a rejection of the holding in Crawford.”\textsuperscript{136}

Second, the Court is unlikely to give much weight to the argument that both scientific data and the conclusions drawn from it are nontestimonial. In their amicus brief, some of the States’ argue that scientific data or observations “are merely a premise of [scientific conclusions]” because “when considered in isolation” conclusions lack significance.\textsuperscript{137} This argument is unlikely to persuade the Melendez-Diaz majority because, as Professor Richard Friedman of the \begin{flushright}

\textsuperscript{132} Id. (“[H]er criminal law opinions provide little evidence of a strong civil libertarian streak of the sort that would lead her to apply constitutional protections for criminal defendants in a strict and unyielding manner.”).  \\
\textsuperscript{133} Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, 129 S. Ct. 2527, 2533 (2009).  \\
\textsuperscript{134} Id. at 2543 (Thomas, J., concurring).  \\
\textsuperscript{135} John Wait, Another “Straightforward Application”: The Impact of Melendez-Diaz on Forensic Testing and Expert Testimony in Controlled Substance Cases, 33 Campbell L. Rev. 1, 14 (2010).  \\
\textsuperscript{136} Id. at 15.  \\
\end{flushright}
University of Michigan notes, “[d]ata and observations are not testimonial . . . [but] a report of them is, if made in anticipation of prosecutorial use.”

Notably, during oral arguments, Justice Scalia, in response to the New Mexico Attorney General’s attempt to distinguish the report in Bullcoming from Melendez-Diaz, quipped that the Bullcoming report “was prepared just for fun, not for use in trial?” Justice Sotomayor also contested the Attorney General’s “mere scrivener” theory that the New Mexico court had adopted. Sotomayor noted that the analyst was not “simply looking at a number and putting it on a report[,]” but was also certifying a number of other things like the condition the sample was received in and that standard procedures were followed. Moreover, citing Melendez-Diaz, the New Mexico Supreme Court conceded that “the blood alcohol report was testimonial” and the Supreme Court’s question presented implicitly presumes that the report is testimonial.

Third, the Court’s recent decision in Bryant demonstrates that the Davis primary-purpose test is alive and well. The Bryant decision clarified much of the ambiguity complained of by New Mexico. Under Bryant, the “primary purpose of an interrogation” is based on “[a]n objective analysis” of the surrounding circumstances.

---

140. Id. at 33–34 (“I’m sorry. He’s not simply looking at a number and putting it on a report. He’s certifying to certain things. He’s certifying to following certain steps, that the evidence wasn’t tampered with. He’s certifying that he’s complied with all the requirements of New Mexico law with respect to the report . . . .”).

141. Id.

143. Petition for Writ of Certiorari, supra note 5, at i (The question presented reads: “Whether the Confrontation Clause permits the prosecution to introduce testimonial statements of a nontestifying forensic analyst through the in-court testimony of a supervisor or other person who did not perform or observe the laboratory analysis described in the statements.”).

144. Michigan v. Bryant, 131 S. Ct. 1143, 1150 (2010) (holding that the statements at issue were testimonial under the primary purpose test).

145. See Brief for Respondent, supra note 110, at 43 (arguing that the primary purpose test “is unworkable because it does not clarify whose purpose must be examined”).

146. Bryant, 131 S. Ct. at 1156.
statements and actions and the circumstances in which the encounter occurred."^{147}

Attorney General King tried to apply Davis's primary-purpose rule to the analyst’s report in Bullcoming.^{148} In so doing, he focused on whether an interrogation was taking place, and, if so, the statements would be regarded as testimonial.^{149} In Bullcoming, because there was no interrogation, Attorney General King argued that the reports are nontestimonial. Justice Scalia responded, however, that whether an interrogation occurs “doesn’t make any difference. That is not the condition for the application of the . . . Confrontation Clause.”^{150} The reports in Bullcoming were prepared for trial. Given Justice Scalia’s comments the Court is likely to hold that the analyst’s report is testimonial under Davis.

Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Kennedy, Alito, and Breyer almost certainly will reject Bullcoming’s Confrontation Clause challenge. They dissented in Melendez-Diaz and could adopt the reasoning in that dissenting opinion to conclude that analysts are not traditional witnesses with personal knowledge of events.^{151} At oral argument, questions from Justice Alito reflected reasoning that would support his holding that laboratory reports are nontestimonial under Crawford. For example, Justice Alito emphasized that the testimonial information in the analyst’s report could be established by indirect evidence.^{152} Justice Alito also asked Attorney General King whether there was any way the police could influence promotions at the laboratory.^{153} This line of questioning could be an attempt to justify holding that the analyst report in Bullcoming is nontestimonial—first, because the report is not meant to serve as a substitute for live testimony and second, because the laboratory employees are independent of the police.

The practical implications of ruling in favor of Bullcoming also counsel against extending Melendez-Diaz. Notably, the States have objected to the additional burdens that Melendez-Diaz has imposed on already overburdened and underfunded prosecutorial systems that require forensic laboratory analysts to testify at trial. As Justices Scalia, Ginsburg, and Thomas appear inclined to maintain the views they expressed in Melendez-Diaz, the outcome in Bullcoming rests largely on the votes of Justices Sotomayor and Kagan—both of whom can be expected to give substantial weight to the states’ practical concerns.

The Bullcoming Court is more likely to reject or distinguish Melendez-Diaz than it is to affirm and extend its holding. The Melendez-Diaz decision greatly fractured the Crawford coalition while leaving open the question of whether a state may substitute analysts at trial. Bullcoming therefore is a prime opportunity for the newly constituted Court to refine its Confrontation Clause jurisprudence and resolve a troubling issue of modern-day criminal law.

155. Ramonas & Turner, supra note 130; Adler, supra note 131.